|--|--|
| Furniture arrangement is everything | Furniture arrangement is important, but there is much more. Look at the styling and materials of the furniture. Do the pieces fit the scale of the room? Remember that each piece affects the entire home, not just the immediate space. Then dig into how the other elements surrounding connect with the furniture pieces. |
| Feng Shui is a religious practice | While there are roots in Taoism, Feng Shui is not a religious practice. It is however, a great way to really infuse your own personal belief system into your home in a very meaningful way. |
| Feng Shui is not relevant today | Feng Shui is just as relevant today as it was for the ancient people. I believe that it is more vital than ever. It can also be applied to any home, no need to worry that your style won't work. |
| Mirrors are bad Feng Shui | Mirrors are not always bad Feng Shui. Sometimes people might think this because there are specific areas such as the bedroom where we do not encourage mirrors. Overall, they lighten and brighten and lift the energy of a room. |
| Red is a must | Traditionally, in China red is known to be the color of good luck and good fortune. If you don't care for red there are other colors and patterns that we can use in your space to bring in the energy of the color red. |
| Feng Shui requires a remodel and hefty investment | You only have to put in what you want. Many adjustments can be very minimal in cost or even FREE. Remember to "shop your own home". |
| You must bring in Asian decor | If you don't love an Asian style of design and furniture, there is no need to bring it in. Feng Shui can work with your desired styling. |
